Van insurance is a must-have if you own one or more vans that you use for your business. It is not legal to drive your van if it is not insured. Plus, if you drive your van without insurance, every day problems collisions, theft, accidents and other minor emergencies can be financially devastating to your business. There are many options for insuring your van or vans.

Transit Van Insurance - Anyone that uses their van for transit within the scope of their business should consider purchasing transit van insurance, which is tailored towards those that move goods from one location to another. When shopping around for insurance, make sure you check out companies on the Internet. Many sites will offer discounts for transit van insurance of up to 20% by purchasing online, rather than in person. Insurance can be costly; however, by opting to purchase this type of coverage on the Internet, you can save valuable money for your business.

Short Term Van Insurance - For businesses that do not continually use their van for work, this insurance option has the potential to drastically save a company on its insurance costs. The owner does not pay for round-the-year use of the van, since it is only put in service for certain jobs. If you are one of the businesses that use their vans only on an as-needed basis, consider short term van insurance. It will still provide the adequate coverage needed, while saving an incredibly amount on your van insurance.

Courier Van Insurance - This type of insurance is perfect if you transport and convey goods to other individuals or businesses. Not only will your van be covered in the untimely event of an accident or theft, but the goods inside will be covered from loss as well. Losing the value of the contents inside the van could sometimes be more detrimental than the loss of the vehicle itself. In order to make sure your courier business is protected from the ultimate loss, be sure to purchase this type of insurance.

Fleet Van Insurance: Do you maintain a large number of vans that you operate for your business? In this scenario, individual insurance for every van would be far too expensive to be a practical option. Insuring the entire fleet under a single policy is a great option for your company's needs. A number of insurance companies offer those clients who have many vehicles to reduce their overall costs with these types of policies. It is not necessary to have to insure hundreds of vehicles either. You can get yourself a nice discount even if you have just 10 or so vans to insure.
